Graphic Communications Corporation Earns Certified Woman Owned Business Status

ATLANTA, GA,—Graphic Communications Corporation (GCC) is proud to announce it has earned the Women’s Business Enterprise National Council (WBENC) and the National Women Business Owner Corporation (NWBOC) certifications. GCC joins a select group of certified commercial printers in Georgia and around the nation that are majority owned and managed by women. This certification provides verification to businesses and organizations seeking to diversify their supplier base.

“This process streamlines the connection with valid and well equipped companies like ours to the marketplace,” says Ann Stallard, GCC Chief Executive Officer. “More of our customers have goals they want to achieve to provide opportunities to a wider range of talent.” GCC has been majority female owned for more than 15 years and Stallard is a recognized spokeswoman for entrepreneurial efforts among women, having served as the President of Women Business Owners of Atlanta now known as NAWBO of Atlanta.

“With both WBENC and NWBOC certifications, we are pleased to be part of the leadership in establishing women as major contributors to the economy of our nation,” states Marie Tuggle, Treasurer. “We are pleased to also be role models to younger women like my granddaughters who can imagine themselves as owning their own businesses some day,” she said.

Graphic Communications Corporation was founded in 1972 by Marie and Hoyt Tuggle and is a full service commercial printer and point-of-purchase communications company in Lawrenceville, Georgia. GCC is one of the very few printing companies in the region that is both a majority-woman owned business and additionally certified as a Forest Stewardship Council (FSC) certified printer, committed to lead green in the printing industry.
